IN the Introduction to the First Part of this Dictionary, a general view was exhibited of the Origin, Nature, and History of the Chinese Language; any part of which it is unnecessary here to repeat.

The Chinese Work, Woo-chay-yun-foo 五車韻府 on which the following Part of the Dictionary is founded, was compiled by Chin Sēen-sǎng 陳先生 who is said to have spent his life in making the collection of words contained in it; and to have died before its publication. He committed his Manuscript to the care of his pupil Han-yih-hoo 含一胡 who travelled over the whole empire in order to verify it, and add to it.

Some of Chin Sēen-sǎng's pupils rose to eminent situations in the state; and when the Emperor Kang-he 康熙 projected the formation of his Dictionary, one of them, Pwan-ying-pin 潘應賓 mentioned to that great Monarch the work of his Master. After much search, it was at last found yet unpublished in the hands of Han-yih-hoo. Considerable use seems to have been made of it in the compilation of Kanghe's Dictionary, for the definition is often verbatim in both.

Pwan-ying-pin, mentioned above, encouraged the publication of the Work, and wrote a Preface to it. He there gives it as his opinion, that there are in Chinese, including synonymous words, and different forms of the same Character in the plain hand, Fifty Thousand Characters; and taking in every variety of accentuation, that there are from Four to Five Thousand enunciated words; and if sounds, for which no Characters exist, be included, he thinks there are Five Thousand Words.

In the original, the arrangement is according to the Sounds and the Tones; but the Characters pronounced alike, and which differ only in Accent, are placed in different volumes, and divided with so much minuteness as to puzzle all the Natives whom I ever saw attempt to consult it. In the year 1812, I took it to pieces, and arranged it under the Syllables as they now stand. It contained about 40,000 Characters, which I at last thought proper to abridge to the number which is contained in this Part of the Dictionary. In the progress of the Work, I have collated it with Kanghe's Dictionary, which is commonly much fuller, and with a small Chinese Dictionary, called Fun-yun 分韻 as well as with the Alphabetic Dictionary of the Roman Catholic Missionaries.

The Pei-wán-yun-foo 佩文韻府 Dictionary, is arranged in the same manner as the Woo-chay-yun-foo, and is equally complicated and difficult to be consulted. I possessed this book from the commencement of my Chinese studies, but never found it useful. There are 131 volumes in all, full of bare quotations, and parts of sentences which are often obscure in themselves, and are generally unaccompanied by any illustration. It was compiled by order of the Emperor Kanghe, in the forty-third year of his reign. Seven years were required to complete it; and seventy-six Literati were engaged in collecting and arranging the materials. In A. D. 1711, it was published.

The Urh-ya 爾雅 is an ancient Dictionary, rather of things than of words, and is now usually printed in three quarto volumes, with wood cuts; when its definitions are useful, they are generally quoted in Kanghe's Dictionary.

When a Person studying Chinese, sees a Character which is new to him, he is unable to find it in a Dictionary by its Pronunciation, for that is not ascertainable from the character itself; he must therefore seek for it under its Radical or Key, hence the necessity of the First Part of this Dictionary: but when a Student hears a new word pronounced, or recollects the sound of a Character which he wishes to use in composing, and the formation of which he either never knew, or has forgotten, its arrangement under the Keys will not enable him to find the Character required; then it is, that the Alphabetic Arrangement becomes necessary.

It having been determined to be more concise in this Second Part of the Dictionary than in the First; it was thought practicable to finish it in one year; and the desire to have A Complete Part for the use of Subscribers, induced the Author to interrupt the Printing of the First Part in order to Print this, which is now laid before the Public.

A person who would learn Chinese, must at first employ Books or Papers which contain the correctly formed Character; a knowledge of abbreviated forms must be acquired in the same way as a knowledge of the running hand in any Alphabetic Language, where the scope and connexion assist the Reader in determining for what the imperfectly formed letter is intended. To insert in a Dictionary all the misspellings, abbreviations, and distortions, which ignorance, or caprice, or local usage adopts, would be an absurd and endless task: there are, however, some abbreviations very generally used, and those, it has been thought right, in many instances to insert below the more correctly formed character, connecting them by a brace.

As it is a principle in most Languages, that from a short word of a specific meaning, various other words, increased by the addition of letters, or syllables shall arise, as plants grow up and branch off from a root, something similar exists in the Chinese Language, and which, as the Student will find, has been attended to in the arrangement of this Part of the Dictionary. The following were laid down as rules by the Author to himself, in the arrangement of the Characters, but those rules have not been invariably adhered to.

- I. That the elementary words or Primitives, under each Syllable, should follow each other according to the number of strokes in each.
- II. That the Primitives should be joined with their compounds, according to the order of the Chinese Keys. And,
- III. That after regularly formed Characters had been given under each Syllable, the Anomalous, or Miscellaneous Characters should be inserted.

The Chinese Accents or Tones, of the more usual Characters are marked, according to the mode which is given in the Author's Grammar of the Chinese Language, to which the Reader is referred. As the Tones are not an original part of the Chinese Language, but like the Hebrew Points, a subsequent addition; and though useful, not essential, he would recommend the Student to defer attention to them, till he has acquired a stock of words and idioms; and then, if acquired at all, it must be by the ear from a living teacher. Without a good Chinese Assistant, a correct pronunciation is not attainable; nor is at all of importance to reading and understanding Chinese books. The nicer modulations of the living voice cannot be taught by letters. Accents and other Marks may recall to a Native the right tone, but will not enable a Foreigner to acquire it. No Frenchman can learn to pronounce English well by book, Marks for this purpose are almost useless, and if they be made the foundation of the Classification of words, they become most embarrassing, even to Natives, as is every day exemplified in China, in the use of the Dictionaries arranged according to the Tones; for the Accents and quantity, are often very disputable subjects on which Scholars and Dictionaries differ materially.

It will be found from the following Work, that there is a great variety of Pronunciation, in parts more perceptible than the Accents; and which in various instances will embarrass a beginner, and for which there is no remedy, but more knowledge and experience of the subject.

The Student must not expect from this Work, the precise words to be employed in translation, but so much of the meaning of a word, as will furnish him with a clue to select a proper phrase. Nor must the Poetical meaning of words be expected to be given with precision; nor the whole of the figurative meaning; nor the Classical allusions, on all occasions. These require more associated effort; more diversity of talent, and of pursuit, than have yet been applied by Europeans to the Chinese Language; and much more than is likely to be soon applied; not because Chinese is less worthy the attention of European Literati than many other subjects to which they do attend, but because application to it is not dictated by fashion,—nor by interest,—nor by national intercourse.

To undertake a defence of every sentence in the Dictionary, and to answer every objection which has been, or anticipate those which may be brought against it, would be an unprofitable occupation. That it has faults, and contains errors, the Author will feel no reluctance in acknowledging; at the same time he must affirm, that he is not convinced of any that are material.

Some Persons have thought the Dictionary too diffuse; and others have been gratified by the occasional notices of Chinese opinions and usages, which are introduced.

The Author's object has been, and the intention of the Dictionary ought to be, to communicate the Language to Europeans. Now the question is, can this be done by a bare definition of single words and of detached sentences? If it can, the Dictionary is too diffuse; but if it cannot, the Dictionary is probably not sufficiently copious. The fitness of the Dictionary to effect its object, depends entirely on the determination of the question proposed. The Author is of opinion, that Europeans, and most of all of those out of China, and who have no Native Assistant, cannot learn Chinese from a Dictionary, which contains only a definition of single words, and of detached sentences. Still with such a collection of Books and Papers, respecting Chinese, as is contained in some European Libraries, and with a great sacrifice of time, it is probable that considerable progress may be made in the Language; but these are helps which few can command; and what may be practicable in that case, becomes impossible to those who are differently circumstanced.

From this view of the question, the Author is still convinced, that with exception of a few paragraphs, as much of the Dictionary as has been Published, is rather too concise than too diffuse. To compare it with a Dictionary of a Language, intended for the inhabitants of a country, with whom that Language is vernacular, and to whom all the allusions contained in the language are more or less familiar—will lead to an erroneous conclusion. And, since Grecian and Roman story are familiar to the inhabitants of Europe, to compare it with Greek and Latin Dictionaries, will also mislead the judgment. The Chinese are an original people. Their modes of thinking and reasoning are original; and are often widely different from those of Europeans; which difference is sometimes amusingly apparent in the disquisitions of European Writers, who try to trace the motives of Chinese conduct in various cases. Some Writers attribute a train of thinking and judging to the Chinese, which a very slight acquaintance with the mind of China would convince them never existed. And an ignorance of the usages and mind of China, will always subject a foreigner to a misapprehension of their language, in any thing that is a little more recondite than, hand a chair;—or, bring a plate.

When the Author expresses his opinion here, and elsewhere of the great difficulty of learning Chinese in Europe; he does it with regret, not with triumph; and to find that he is mistaken will be a source of pleasure, not of mortification.

It has been suggested that the Orthography of the Dictionary should have been that of the Manuscripts and Books already found in Europe. Had there existed any uniform Orthography in the world, it would have been adopted before the suggestion was made. But the Portuguese, the French, and the Germans, had all previously used an Orthography suited to their respective languages, and different from each other. In fact this variety in writing the names of Persons, Places, and foreign Words, is a material defect in Alphabetic writing; which defect has introduced much confusion into History, Geography, and Foreign Languages. As no uniform system of writing Chinese words with the Roman Alphabet existed, the Author could not see any propriety in his giving the English reader Xi, for the sound She; Goei, for Wei; Pim, for Ping; çu, for Tsze, &c., merely because the first European Writers on the Chinese Language had spelled the sounds in that manner. The French had already altered much of the Orthography; they had turned Xi into Chi, for the sound which in English is expressed by She; but that tended to mislead the English reader (for whom the Work was particularly intended) just as much as the first spelling, and therefore it was judged proper to adopt an entirely new Orthography. There are, however, some single sounds, which at first sight an English Scholar would spell differently from the Orthography of this Dictionary, but when he has gone through all the sounds, he will probably find that the one he has adopted, is wanted in another part of the system, with a different sound from that in which he has already used it; for example Kae and Keae, where Ae, has the sound of igh, in the word high. It occurs to many to write this sound with Ay; but ay, is required in Chinese Syllables pronounced as in the words, Day, May, &c., which confounds the Chinese sound High, here spelled Hae, with the English Hay. If it be said, why not make it Hi, I would ask the objector to write He-ae (Portuguese Hiai.) which he must then make Hèi. I further request him to write the sound Wei, or the Portuguese Goei; for which Ei alone will answer, but Ei in the preceding instance, and in this, must be pronounced very differently.

So with respect to the Syllables Tèen, Hèen, &c. Some would write Tien, Hien, but if i has been adopted, as is employed above in Hi, Hien will by no means give the sound wanted; in the one case, Hi sounds like High, and in the other, like He. A similar confusion in other cases could be easily exemplified, were it here necessary.

Without assuming that the Orthography adopted is the best possible; it is affirmed that to enable a person to judge, it is requisite that he first spell all the Chinese words; for to judge of single words only will mislead and subject him to the absurdity of giving the same spelling for different sounds.

In extenuation of the stiffness and occasional harshness of the style in this Work, it may be said, that as long as the sense of the English sentence is apparent, a literal and idiomatic translation of Chinese Sentences is much better for a Student, than a free and vague translation, which contains generally the idea of the original, but nothing of the manner. A man who wants to learn the language of Confucius, had better hear him with a little of his Chinese idiom (call it broken English if you will) than listen to him speaking the most Classical English style. Although a free translation is always more easy than a close translation, the Author prefers the latter, because he thinks it more calculated to answer the end proposed: but to unite a close rendering and perspicuity, is sometimes impracticable,—in such cases more freedom must be used.

Apologies for real faults are seldom well received, because they are very often the unfounded pretexts of ignorance or carelessness: however they are sometimes well founded, and should be listened to by candid interpreters of men's characters and works. The Chinese Letters in this part of the Dictionary, are confessedly deficient in elegance of form. The large ones in the first Part of the Dictionary, are in general, beautifully written; but those in this volume, though correct, are sometimes rather clumsy. The difference was occasioned by an Act of the Chinese Government;—it said, “You may learn our language if you can, but we will afford you no facilities; our subjects shall not cut letters for you.” In consequence of this decision, it became necessary for an English Printer to write the Characters, and to employ Portuguese subjects to cut them. And for some time, neither the Writer, Printer, nor Type Cutters, had any native assistance. The experiment proved to all parties, that such assistance was not now indispensably necessary.

As to the utility or importance of the Chinese Language, it does not well become the Writer to speak much in its favour. It has been said, that “It must be left to Merchants and to Missionaries to toil their way through the wilderness of the Chinese Language to the deserts of Chinese Literature.”* This is the language of narrow prejudice, ignorant of the subject of which it speaks, and will not weigh much with those who can view the human species with more liberal sentiments than such as are dictated by merely national or European feelings. Without insisting on the fact, that there are beautiful pieces of Poetry; interesting and instructive portions of History and Biography; and important Moral Maxims, in Chinese, as well as in other Languages; that it is a language amongst the most ancient and the most extensively known on earth; that it is the living language of five nations, which together, constitute one third of mankind.—Not to insist on these circumstances, I would now recommend another view of the subject:

It is not the sole question which the virtuous member of a family puts to himself, Will this benefit me? He also asks in reference to any course of action, Will this do good to my family? The true Patriot goes beyond his family occasionally, and does what he thinks for the benefit of his country, though not to the interest of his own family; and the truly good man, sometimes does that which is an inconvenience to himself, or which does not benefit his family or his country immediately, but which is calculated eventually to benefit mankind. Whilst Christendom has furnished many individuals who have cherished a real and practical general benevolence, it has seldom or never entered into the views of learned bodies, or national councils to act occasionally solely for the benefit of others. Scholars often ask, what they are to get by learning Chinese; but supposing there be nothing to learn, have European Scholars nothing to teach?—has it never occurred to them as Individuals or as Societies, to learn Asiatic languages for the purpose of writing books of Science and of general Literature in those languages? If they, whose minds have been illumined with the cheering beams of science, will not sometimes learn foreign languages for the purpose of communicating it, how is it to be expected that those who yet grope in darkness, should be at the trouble to learn a foreign language for the sake of that knowledge of which they cannot perceive the value. If men continue to act on this principle, the progress of science must indeed be slow.

* Electric Review.

England, Holland, Portugal, and America, have at present, most intercourse with China; and their pecuniary interests are most concerned. The Dutch Government indeed rules over an extensive colony of Chinese, on Java. Is it expecting too much of these several Governments to devote a few hundred pounds annually to the cultivation of the Language of the people with whom they have extensive dealings? Is it too much to ask them to give some existence in their Public Schools to a Language which contains many Thousand Volumes of Original Literature? Will the Colleges and Universities themselves not allow of any appropriation of their funds, nor any encouragement to their leisure members to attend to this subject?*

Till a few individuals of correct sentiments and feelings, whose sole profession is Literature and Science, be supported by their respective Governments, or learned Societies, to study and teach the Chinese Language, its Character cannot be fairly estimated, nor can European Science be transfused into it. The mind of man is but limited. Merchants and Missionaries have other objects to attend to besides Language, Literature, and Science. They are not therefore to be hastily blamed because they do not perform all that is desirable.

The sentiments of Chinese Sages and Moralists are quite in favour of peaceable endeavours to communicate the knowledge one man possesses to another; nor can they, according to their own principles ever blame it. They have indeed sometimes acted on the principle both in ancient and modern times. Confucius travelled to instruct and civilize others; and the reigning Dynasty sent an envoy to Loo-choo, to advise that District Schools should be established on those islands, and that the King should reward, by his favour and countenance, the diligent students. Standard Chinese Writers blame the selfishness, which under various plausible pretexts would hide the light of truth, or forbid its being exhibited to the views of mankind; and their Moralists enjoin the virtuous to print and distribute widely good books. It is true, that their benevolent doctrines are but rarely seen in their practice; but it is not to justify what they do, that their sentiments are here introduced, but to shew that they also inculcate the opinion, that we should not always act merely from a regard to ourselves.

This doctrine is perhaps universally acknowledged in respect of individuals, and as it is equally true of large communities and of nations; the more it is adopted and acted on by these, just in the same proportion will Peace and Order prevail throughout the world, and ultimate happiness, the wish of every heart, be generally diffused.

* The soil of Oriental Literature in Holland, as elsewhere, is barren.—Latin and Greek Literature receive more encouragement here.—I should be more reconciled to it, if some small part of this patronage were to overflow upon the orientlists.

H. A. Schultens, to Sir W. Jones.

It is incumbent on the Author to return sincere thanks to THE HONORABLE THE COURT OF DIRECTORS OF THE UNITED EAST INDIA COMPANY, for their generosity in defraying the expense of this Work; and also to return his best acknowledgements to the Select Committee, and several other Gentlemen, belonging to the English Factory in China, whose good offices have not been wanting to second the liberality of the Honorable Court, in regard to the progress of the Dictionary.

To His Majesty's Ministers, who act as Lords Commissioners of the Treasury, the Author is indebted for the remission of all Import Charges on the Dictionary, and his other Publications on the Chinese Language; and he feels it his duty to express here, the grateful sense he entertains of their condescension and kindness in thus encouraging the efforts of an individual to promote the study of a hitherto neglected part of Philology.

FOR CONSULTING THE DICTIONARY.

1st. To those Students who hear a Native speak the Mandarin Tongue, and to those who have those sounds upon their memory, the reference is at once to the body of the Dictionary in the same manner as in any Alphabetic Dictionary. 2d. When Persons who speak the more Northern Dialects are heard, No. I, will help to remove difficulties which arise from variety of Pronunciation. 3d. When a Student hears Persons who speak only the Canton Dialect, assistance will be derived from No. III. And 4th. When a Student consults Manuscript Dictionaries, No. IV, will refer him to the Syllable which corresponds in this Dictionary.

5th. When a Person who knows not the sound of a character, nor has any living Teacher, desires to find a Character which he sees in a Chinese book, he must refer to No. XI, where the Characters are arranged according to the number of the strokes of the pencil, exclusive of the Radical; thus 位 Wei is found under the Radical 亻 or 人 Jin, and five strokes, 忠 Chung under 心 Sin, and four strokes, &c. When the Character sought is found by this means, the Syllable opposite it, will direct to that part of the body of the Work, where its definition will be found.

6th. When a difficulty occurs in ascertaining the proper Radical, assistance will be found from No. XII, in which case all the lines in the Character must be counted, and when found, the Radical will be seen at the lower part of the column.

7th. To a Person composing in Chinese, No. XIII, by referring from the numbers to the body of the work, will assist the memory, or suggest new terms. It must not be expected from it that it will enable a Person wholly ignorant of the language to choose proper terms to express his ideas.—See Contents.

☞ The Reader will find more on this subject at the commencement of the Second Volume.

ANOMALIES IN THE ORTHOGRAPHY.

It will lessen the difficulty of finding words, to remember that

1. Chǎng and Tsǎng, Cho and Tso, are sometimes confounded with each other.
2. G, is hard in Cih.
3. Gan and An, Gaou and Aou, are used for each other.
4. K, in the Peking Dialect, before e and i, is pronounced as Ch and Ts; thus King, is turned into Ching; and Keang, becomes Tséang.
5. H before e and i, is by some pronounced as Sh and as s; thus He, becomes She, and Heō, is changed to Seō.
6. Man and Mwan; Pan and Pwan, are confounded.
7. Tsoo and Choo; We and Wei; Me and Mei; are also confounded.
8. The provincial Pronunciation, as given in this Dictionary, is that of the City of Canton, which is often different from that of Macao, and other districts in the Province; and,
9. Although the Pronunciation of each class of Characters be generally the same, there are exceptions; and it has not been attempted to give the pronunciation of each Character by itself.

DICTIONARY

CHINESE LANGUAGE,

ARRANGED ALPHABETICALLY.

A	AOU	CHA
A. I. SYLLABLE. A, as in Art, or as if written Ah. This initial sound is common in the Provincial Dialect of Canton; in the Kwan or Mandarin Dialect, it becomes Ya. 亞 / 1. Of the second class; inferior. This is the appellative so common in the names of poor people, as A-lan, A-pin, &c. Many now write it 阿 O, which, in the Provincial Dialect, is pronounced as A. For words thus pronounced, see Ya.	A N. II. SYLLABLE. As if written Aan. Provincial Dialect, Oan. 安 2. Rest; composure. For a further definition, and words thus pronounced, see Gan. <hr style="width: 20%; margin: 10px auto;"/> A O U. III. SYLLABLE. A broad, and coalescing with the other vowels. Provincial Dialect Ow, as in How. 澳 / 3. A deep bay; inlet from the sea or mouth of a river. For further definition, and words thus pronounced, see Gaou.	CHA. IV. SYLLABLE. A broad. The Provincial Dialect in the same; by some pronounced Tsa. 查 4. Wood floating in water; a float; a raft; to examine into; to enquire; to refer to records in public offices. A surname. A bar or hindrance. 查 Keu-cha, The great raft,—probable allusion to the ark of Noah. Cha-chǎ 查察 to examine; to scrutinize narrowly. Cha-hea 下 name of a place. Cha-wǎn 問 to enquire, to ask about, to investigate.

This word, occurs very frequently in Chinese government papers, after stating a case, and before giving a decision, they use it denoting, I have referred to the law, or the records of the office, and find—then follows an opinion or decision.

CHAY.—XTH SYLLABLE.

Ay, pronounced as in Day. Manuscript Dictionaries Che and Tche. Canton Dialect, Chay.

者

437. The Chinese define
this word as a Disjunctive Particle, and as a Demonstrative Pronoun, This; for which the character 這 Chay is now, though erroneously, always employed. In the first sense it is often used when defining, and is placed after the characters to be defined,
and the definition given; as 天者
理也 T'een-chay, le yay; Heaven,
—that is—a principle of order. In 啟 | Ke chay, at the commencement of letters, Chay has merely this Disjunctive sense, denoting a pause
after Ke, which implies, I commence;

I now begin to state or open the subject. After a Verb, or a sentence denoting action or passion, Chay denotes commonly the Agent, or the person suffering; answering to, as he; she; it; or they, who. 愛

| Gae chay, He who loves or loving; is the example usually given.
But the fact is, that whether following Verbs or Nouns, it simply directs the mind to pause, and point it to the word or sentence preceding; Gae-chay, may either be, The virtue of love or charity, or those who love.
仁 | 愛也 Jin chay gae yay,
Jin (benevolence) that is love. Jinchay, may, when standing alone, either be Benevolence, or those who exercise it.

"In the Chinese Drama, certain words or characters are adapted to point out the general characteristics of the different Dramatis Personæ, and these particular words are made use of in every Play indiscriminately, whether its complexion be Tragic or Comic. No similar usage can be found on the European stage, unless indeed we except the invariable terms of Harlequin, Clown, Pantaloon, &c., in the English Pantomime, which still mark with precision the station and character of the several performers, however varied, may be the action of the piece. The words made-use of, in Chinese plays, consist principally of the six following, viz. 末 Mō, 淨 Tsǎng, 生 Sǎng, 旦 Tan, 丑 Chow, 外 Wae. The first of these 末 Mō, is called 老生 Laou-sǎng, and generally typifies a principal character, as a father, uncle, &c., or any person somewhat advanced in age; and is applied to

Nan-keō 男脚 male personages. Tsǎng 淨 is used in reference to characters with painted faces, or those wearing masques, being subdivided into Hung 紅 and Hih tsǎng 黑 淨 red and black Tsǎng, which are the 正 Ching, or principal parts under this general denomination. The 副 Foo, or secondary, being styled Urh-hwa-mēen 二花面 second painted face. 生 Sǎng, is a male character, and is subdivided into 正 Ching and 小 Seaou, Chief and lesser. Tan 旦 is invariably a female character, and is distinguished into Ching-tan 正旦 Seaou-tan 小旦 and Laou tan 老旦 besides which, there is occasionally a Chen tǎn 貼旦 which, in general, is a servant or some such person. Chow 丑 seems often to typify a character disagreeable, either from personal deformity, or some other cause; and is also called 小花面 Seaou hwa mēen. The last, 外 Wae, is a Fun mēen 粉面 or painted-face character, and often one with a grotesque and long beard.—The great divisions of the piece, or the acts as we style them, exist perhaps rather in the book, than in the representation; being, on the Chinese stage, not so distinctly marked as on ours, by the lapse of a considerable interval of time. The first is called 楔子 Sēē tsze, which means literally A door, or the side-posts of a door; and hence, metaphorically the opening. The rest are styled 折 Chě, or breaks. The words 上 Shang, and 下 Hea, To ascend and descend, are used for enter and exit."

Classical books of the Chinese. Yĭh heō | 學 the science of the Yĭh-king, or the doctrine of Changes, Combinations, and Transmutations: a science in which it is assumed that Chaos was divided into two parts, answering to male and female; light and darkness; spirit and matter, and that from the combinations and reciprocal action of these, result all the effects which take place in the universe. To these two powers, numbers correspond. A unit, and every odd number answers to the male energy; a dual, and every even number to the female. Of these numbers, the Kwa or lines of Fūh-he, are the visible signs, and it being assumed that these signs answer to the things signified; and from a knowledge of all the various combinations of numbers, a knowledge of all possible occurrences in nature may be previously known. On this sandy foundation many of the Chinese opinions are built, and hence the phrase 定數 Ting soo, A fixed number; denoting that it is decreed, or fixed by a philosophical necessity.—The science of numbers, which some think the only road to truth, has been abused more than most sciences, to mislead mankind.

Yĭh kwa | 卦 the signs, forms, or species of all things in nature; or something like the 'intelligible numbers' of Pythagoras; 'the archetype of the world,'—the 'monad, duad' and so on, of which nothing either certain or important is now known;

some call them 'the symbolical representations of the first principles and forms of nature,' which phraseology answers pretty nearly to the language made use of by the Chinese, but what is really meant, in either case, is not so easy to determine.

END OF THE SYLLABIC DICTIONARY.

C H I N E S E
NAMES OF STARS AND CONSTELLATIONS

COLLECTED

AT THE REQUEST OF THE AUTHOR OF THIS DICTIONARY,

B Y

JOHN REEVES, Esq. F. R. & L. S. *

An attempt has been made to identify the Stars of the Chinese Constellations with the Constellations of the European Globes, the process has been tedious, and the result not altogether satisfactory; yet there is enough to gratify the Curiosity of some, or prevent the labour of others, who might be inclined to make a similar attempt.

That a people, like the Chinese, who affect a superiority over all others,—and who carry, or pretend to carry, the annals of their History back to a period earlier than any other nation,—that such a people should have made considerable progress in Astronomical science, was to be looked for as a natural consequence: but to our surprise, we find they know little or nothing about it. They may indeed have divided the Stars in and near the Zodiac, into their Twenty-eight Constellations (and as the whole Constellation of Leo is omitted, 'tis probable this was a Chinese arrangement);—they may have given names of their own invention to some groupes of stars, and to a few of the more brilliant single stars that are visible to them;—they may have recorded Eclipses—but this will be found the extent of their performance; and to record an eclipse, or to name a star, does not constitute an Astronomer.

The Chinese have been described as having Arts, but no Science,—and the more we are enabled by a progressive knowledge of their Language to examine their literary works with our own eyes, the better shall we appreciate the justness of this description of them.

All the books written by the Chinese, and containing accounts of the Stars, are intended only for Astrological purposes; and though mention is made of the precession of the equinoxes, in the books of the ninth century, yet it must be remembered, that the Mahomedans had entered China before this period, and therefore 'tis probable, that the Chinese acquired their first notions of Astronomy (as a Science) from some of those foreigners who accompanied the Tartar Monarchs in their conquests of the country, and who probably brought with them those Astronomical instruments which are described (Du Halde, vol 2, page 130) as having

* To Mr. REEVES the Author is also indebted for most of the names of plants, and other natural productions which occur in the Dictionary: Mr. Reeves by his industrious research in China, and readiness to communicate the result of his efforts, has uniformly shewn himself the friend of Science and the Arts, and the Author has much pleasure in thus publicly acknowledging his obligations to him.

been found at Nanking and Peking. It appears clear there that they were not made for either of the places, where they were found; and it seems equally clear, the Chinese were not then able to use them; they were then obliged to entrust the Astronomical department of their Calender to a Mahomedan, and afterwards to the Jesuit Missionaries, who in the reign of the Emperor Kang-he, composed for them all the books and tables necessary for making the calculations themselves.

The works of these Missionaries remain lasting memorials of their perseverance and abilities,—to them the Chinese are indebted for all the sciences they possess.—They surveyed and mapped their country for them,—and wrote treatises explanatory of all the treasures of European Science. Among these, the most interesting to an European is the 律曆淵源 Leñh, Leñh, Yuen, Yuen, comprised in one hundred volumes: a few of which illustrate the theory of Music with the European mode of notation; the others contain the principles of Mathematics, Spherics, the Calculation of Eclipses, with tables of the Sun and Moon's mean Motions, Nodes, and Anomaly, with tables of all the necessary Equations. Tables of prime numbers and factors of composite numbers, natural sines, logarithms of numbers, logarithmic sines, tangents, &c. &c.

In the thirty-first volume of this elaborate Work, is given a list of Ninety-two Stars, chiefly of the first to the third degree of magnitude, with their right ascension and declination, measured upon the equator,—though the former is expressed in signs, degrees, and minutes. These commence with ♄ Capricornus, or 270° , therefore $2^\circ 2'$ will be the second degree in Piscis, or rather $270^\circ + 62'$, say 332° , upon the equator. Another list is given of the same stars with their right ascension and declination in degrees of the ecliptic, and a table of their annual variation in right ascension and declination, of which a copy is annexed. There is also another list of two hundred and seventeen Stars, chiefly from the third to the fifth degree of magnitude, but including a few of the former list, and also a few Nebulæ.

These lists formed the ground work of the undertaking, and it would appear at first sight no difficult task to compare them with the globes, and ascertain the stars intended, but it must be remembered, that though the stars themselves are laid accurately down upon the globes, (Bardin's eighteen inch were used on the occasion) yet many of them have no mark by which they can be specifically distinguished,—and therefore it was necessary to call in the assistance of Bode's Atlas, and use his marks or numbers, where others were wanting,—and even with his accuracy, there are still a few small stars, chiefly between the Horns of Taurus, and others, between 353° and 356° , which admit of doubt.

At the time these tables were formed, the Jesuit Missionaries constructed two Planispheres, (this appears indeed to have been the more particular work of F. Verbiest) one of the northern and another of the southern constellations, and ornamented the margin with views of the instruments, as Quadrants, Sextants, Dials, &c. used, and also with views of the curves formed by the planets in their course round the sun.

Each of these Planispheres is upwards of five feet in diameter, divided round the margin into 360° degrees, and having a scale also of Polar (or rather equatorial) distance, though not of equal parts, but diminishing as they approach the pole, so that the ten first degrees, or from the equator to 10° , are equal to 18° degrees at the poles, or from 72° to 90° .

The Stars near the equator, allowing for the variation, may be considered as laid down correctly; less accuracy is found as we approach towards the north pole; the southern constellations are still more inaccurate, and not easily to be de-terminated; and the Chinese names of such as do not rise in the latitude of Peking, are merely translations of the European ones, as Apis, Phœnix, Piscis Volans, Octans, &c.

Could a perfectly well printed copy of these Planispheres * be obtained, it would be a valuable acquisition, and render the Catalogue more complete. The one used upon the present occasion had been damaged and torn, and mended in some places with blank paper, by which means some of the names may be missing; and some stars are omitted, among which are Capella, Scheat in Pegasus, &c. It had also been originally smeared in the Printing, so that many of the names could not have been distinguished without the aid of a smaller map, and the verbal description of the courses of the planets is so much smeared as to be totally illegible.
